WANTED HIS ORANGES.

First Thought of a Man Who Escaped

One evening a one-armed convict in the South, whose duty it was to couple cars on the railroad, was standing on the end of the first flat-car, pin in hand, ready to make a coupling when the engine should approach closely enough. He was holding some oranges and his attention was somewhat divided between his duty and the safety of his fruit, says the Waverley Magazine.

The engine was not backing in, but coming pilot first, and when the coupling-bar struck the socket the shock threw the man off his feet. He fell between the two, and before the engine could be stopped it struck him, doubled him togetter and ran over his body, lifting the truck wheels quite off the track. One evening a one-armed convict in the

There he was, wedged into a ball, sustaining the whole enormous weight, and the pilot was canted over him at an angle of forty-five degrees.

The captain of the gang supposed the man to be dead, and it was with no hope of saving him that he shouted to the convicts to pry up the engine at once. They ran at the word. Beams were thrust under, the great mass of metal was raised by main force and the man was pulled out.

To the amazement of every one he stretched himself, felt his limbs and body, slowly regained his feet, and said:
"Whar's my oranges?"
